

T.O. THINKS IT CAN DANCE?

BE PREPARED AT TOMORROW'S SEASON 3 AUDITIONS, JUDGE SAYS

By SANDY CAETANO

The temperature is at the freezing mark outside the Metro Toronto Convention Centre on Front Street.

You've got long johns under your jeans, a hooded sweater on under your coat and a steaming cup of hot chocolate in your hands.

But camping out for 10 hours to audition for the third season of CTV's So You Think You Can Dance Canada won't be worth it if you don't have what you need.

Judge Jean-Marc Généreux says contestants must come prepared – paperwork, music and dance routines.

"Just make sure you check the website for everything you need. Don't forget your identification or music," Généreux says. "It would be a shame if they were in line for all those hours and have to be turned away ... so go camp out – I'll come camp with you guys!"

Auditions are set to take place tomorrow with registration opening at 8 a.m.

Généreux expects a mix of seasoned and inexperienced dancers this time around.

Season one saw mostly accomplished dancers try out, while season two was chock-full of energetic rookies.

"We have two seasons in the bank already, and we know Canadian dancers are good. What I'm looking for, personally, is somebody who knows what we try to do which is the fusion of styles, cross over styles," he says.

"We're going to ... push the envelope and make sure they reach their full potential."

FIND THE FUTURE GLAM AT CLUB XS

The future is now – now on Richmond Street, that is.

Earlier this year, Republik nightclub was abducted from Richmond Street West, and a futuristic alien craft has settled in its place – Club XS, this year's most glamorous new club.

Not for the faint of heart, this hotspot is as intense as it is swanky.

It boasts "full (bottle) service only" on its website – I guess because in the fast-paced frenzy of the future, who has time for individual drink orders anyway?

Club XS has conjured up a distinct look and feel that I might call "future glam," and they have achieved a fine balance and contrast between the subtle variations of decor amongst the different rooms within.

Minimal appointments and light surface colours in one room almost suggest the sterility of space, but stop short and instead characterize the atmosphere as classy, clean-cut and cool.

Darker dance floors are enlightened with shimmering disco balls, whose projected snowflakes mingle with the starry, backlit perforated walls and columns.

There's no shortage of exciting and artistic lighting and laser effects for your entertainment, spun across all surfaces in provocative shades of red, purple and blue.

I feel like this place is exactly what Justin Timberlake had in mind when he conjured his album title, Indeed, Club XS is the future incarnate. The look, the feel, the music and the swingin', sexy clientele are all part of the program.

Ditch the pubs and lounges for a weekend, hop in your time machine, and party XS-ively at this über-club. Modern majesty only – Neanderthals and meat-heads need not show up.
